

Alec Benjamin - Mind Is A Prision

Sometimes I think too much, yeah, I get so caught up tom:
                Ebm (forma dos acordes no tom de Cm )
Capostraste na 3º casa
                                                                   I'm always stuck in my head
Intro: F Dm Am C
                                                                   I wish I could escape, I tried to yesterday
[Primeira Parte]
                                                                   Took all the sheets off my bed
I don't live in California, I'll inform you, that's not where [Refrão]
\ensuremath{\text{I'm}} just a tenant, paying rent inside this body and \ensuremath{\text{I}}
                                                                   Then I tied up my linen with five strips of ribbon I found
Got two windows and those windows, well I'll call them my eyes Scaled the side of the building
I'm just going where the wind blows, I don't get to decide
                                                                   I ran to the hills till they found me
[Pré-Refrão]
                                                                   And they put me back in my cell
                                                                   All by myself, alone with my thoughts again
Sometimes I think too much, yeah, I get so caught up
                                                                   I guess my mind is a prison and I'm never gonna get out
I'm always stuck in my head
I wish I could escape, I tried to yesterday
                                                                   Said even if it's true, no matter what I do
Took all the sheets off my bed
                                                                   I'm never gonna escape
[Refrão]
                                                                   I won't give up on hope, secure another rope
Then I tied up my linen with five strips of ribbon I found
                                                                   And try for another day
Scaled the side of the building
                                                                   Said even if it's true, no matter what I do
I ran to the hills till they found me
                                                                   I'm never gonna escape
And they put me back in my cell
                                                                   I won't give up on hope, secure another rope
All by myself, alone with my thoughts again
                                                                   And try for another day
I guess my mind is a prison and I'm never gonna get out
                                                                   [Refrão]
[Segunda Parte]
                                                                   Then I tied up my linen with five strips of ribbon I found
So they tranquilized me, analyzed me, threw me back in my cage Scaled the side of the building
Then they tied me to an IV, told me I was insane
                                                                   I ran to the hills till they found me
\ensuremath{\mathrm{I'm}} a prisoner, a visitor inside of \ensuremath{\mathrm{my}} brain
                                                                   And they put me back in my cell
And no matter what I do, they try to keep me in chains
                                                                   All by myself, alone with my thoughts again
[Pré-Refrão]
                                                                   I guess my mind is a prison and I'm never gonna get out
