

Camel - Eyes Of Ireland

tom: F

Listen now boys, my grandmother said -
 I'll tell you a story and then off to bed.
 There once was a time, we lived of the land,
 Harvest would come, and we all lent a hand.
 But winds blew our lives, and scattered our seeds
 Changing the landscape, from flowers to weeds
 See in the graveyard the families gone
 The grandest of tombstones carry them on
 When you sail from the Harbour
 It's your last eyes of Ireland

We tended the fire, and faeries appeased
 The flames never died until we had to leave.
 And when we were gone, the house tumbled down
 And covered our footprints, we'd left on the ground
 When you sail from the Harbour
 It's your last eyes of Ireland

 My eyes are now tired and no longer see
 But visions of Ireland linger in me
 So carry your past in the rooms of your heart
 And you'll never be empty of love when you part
 When you sail from the Harbour
 It's your last eyes of Ireland
