I'm driving through a desert that stretches without an end
My old car rattles, my cigarette burns, no need to pretend
The smoke swirls and twists, forming visions in the air
A mirage in the distance, but it leads me nowhere

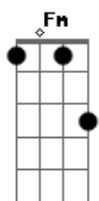

I glance in the rearview, haunted by the days long gone
The road feels endless because the past keeps holding on
No matter how I push ahead, the memories stay strong
I'm caught between what's right and where I don't belong

[Refrão]

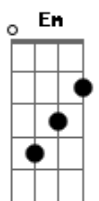

The sun sets red, and the shadows grow
I chase horizons, but the truth I'll never know
The whiskey stings, the blackbirds cry
This road's my burden, beneath the endless sky

I've learned not to trust old friends; their words are never true
They ask for a ride but leave you broken and bruised

Love on the corners is fleeting and cold
Like promises whispered but never told

The sky bleeds fire as the sun dips low
My dogs rest quiet, but my mind won't let go
I wonder if I have a family waiting somewhere
But I keep driving, chasing freedom in the air

[Refrão]

The sun sets red, and the shadows grow
I chase horizons, but the truth I'll never know
The whiskey stings, the blackbirds cry
This road's my burden, beneath the endless sky

Sometimes I'm not sure if I'm running from the lies
Or from my own shadow that stretches under the skies
False words echo, but I've hardened my skin
The radio plays songs that won't let me win

[Refrão]

The sun sets red, and the shadows grow
I chase horizons, but the truth I'll never know
The whiskey stings, the blackbirds cry
This road's my burden, beneath the endless sky
