                                                                I'm going down, now
                                                                With all of my
            [Primeira Parte]
                                                                [Refrão]
I wore diamonds for the birth of your baby
                                                                Fine china and fresh linen
                    Fb
For the birth of your son
     Eb
                                                                All of my dresses with them tags still on them
On the same day my husband to be
                                                                Fine china and dull silver
Packed his things to run
                                                                My white horses and my ivory almonds
  Cm Bb Gm
Was bittersweet to say the least
                                                                I guess they really got the best of us, didn't they?
Gm Bb
One life begins one comes undone
                                                                They said that love was enough but it wasn't
       Cm Bb
I've always been a strong woman of faith
                                                                The earth shattered, the sky opened
         Bb
Strong like a tree but the unlucky one
                                                                                     Gm
                                                                The rain was fire but we were wooden
[Pré-Refrão]
                                                                [Ponte]
I'm going down, now
With all of my
                                                                All of my all of my fine china
[Refrão]
                                                                All of my all of my fine china
                                                                All of my all of my fine china
Fine china and fresh linen
                                                                Blue uh, blue
All of my dresses with them tags still on them
                                                                [Refrão]
Fine china and dull silver
My white horses and my ivory almonds
                                                                Fine china and fresh linen
I guess they really got the best of us, didn't they?
                                                                All of my dresses with them tags still on them
They said that love was enough but it wasn't
                                                                Fine china and dull silver
The earth shattered, the sky opened
                                                                My white horses and my ivory almonds
                     Gm
The rain was fire but we were wooden
                                                                I guess they really got the best of us, didn't they?
[Segunda Parte]
                                                                They said that love was enough but it wasn't
                                                                The earth shattered, the sky opened
I wore diamonds for the day of our wedding
                                                                                     Gm
                                                                The rain was fire but we were wooden
           Eb
For our day in the sun
On the same day my mother to be said she wouldn't come Cm Bb Gm
                                                                Fine china, fine china, fine china
It's always been that way with me
                                                                Fresh linen, fresh linen, fresh linen
                  Bb
                                                                Eb F Gm
