

Lewis Capaldi - A Cure For Minds Unwell

Smiling while I'm hiding what I'm going through But you know, you know, you know That if I'm being honest I couldn't tell you this is all I wanted I struggle sleeping 'cause the house feels haunted Filled with the shadows of regret a And the things I should've said To the ones I laid to rest and lately I'm terrified that all my youth is fading Man, growing old is so excruciating Is there a cure for minds unwell 'Cause my head's a living hell If I'm honest with myself So how am I supposed to see an end To my own consuming constant fear and dread When I can't even seem to make it out of bed Yeah if I'm being honest I couldn't tell you this is all I wanted I struggle sleeping 'cause the house feels haunted Filled with the shadows of regret and The things I should've said To the ones I laid to rest and lately I'm terrified that all my youth is fading Man, growing old is so excruciating Is there a cure for minds unwell 'Cause my head's a living hell If I'm honest with myself