

LP - Your Town

```
Tom: C
                                                              Something in the air intoxicates in your town
                                                              And even though the streets are filled with pain
Another year gone and lost and lately
                                                              There's a part of me that always wants to stay in your town
I would die just to talk or maybe hold you for a day
                                                               And time stays frozen, all seems golden now
It's not sunny like California
But the stories on every corner
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
Make the cold winds feel okay
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
                                                                             Am
                                                              Oh oh oh, oh oh oh oh
Although I know that we've gone on alone and we're caught in Oh oh oh, in your town
the dark
                            Am
I'm already thrilled just to be in the place where you are
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
I feel a little less lonely right away
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
                                                                              Am
Something in the air intoxicates in your town
                                                              Oh oh oh, oh oh oh oh
And even though the streets are filled with pain
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
There's a part of me that always wants to stay in your town
                                                              I feel a little less lonely right away
And time stays frozen, all seems golden now
                                                              Something in the air intoxicates in your town
Going past old and new at break speed
                                                              And even though the streets are filled with pain
Holding on tight while snapshots take me over, turn the page
                                                              There's a part of me that always wants to stay in your town
                                                               And time stays frozen, all seems golden now
Wondering, do you know I'm here
                                 Am
Thinking I see you everywhere and nowhere, it's all the same
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
Although I know that we've gone on alone and we're caught in
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
                                                              Oh oh oh, oh oh oh oh
I'm already thrilled just to be in the place where you are
                                                              Oh oh oh, in your town
I feel a little less lonely right away
                                                              And time stays frozen and all seems golden now
```

Acordes

