

Rusty Cage - The Final Voyage Of The Wailer's Essex

But awake to find water to last two more days
                                                                                       C
                                                              Our spirits all broken, our minds are all crazed

                                                              And oh, how I'd kill for just one more good meal
                                                              But home's a little farther away
                           Em
I done my level best, to whomever's concerned
                                                                         G
               Fm
For children of wailer's, we all take a turn
                                                              But sing, sing, we're on our way home
    Dm G
Now we lay in our oars boat, us six men at sea
                                                              Across the Pacific, and through the unknown

And travel for home with rations for three
                                                              With God as our shepherd then no harm shall pass
Two ounces fresh water and hardtack a day
                                                              We'll be in Nantucket at last
               G
But we'll see Nantucket again
                                                              But oh, when I look at my crewman, I see them looking back at Forty days and forty nights, we followed the wind
                                                              Humanity gone from their eyes
                Em
In the southern Pacific, many miles from land
                                                              Once we were men of our god, and brothers at sea
The first mate of Essex, and few crew with me
                                                              Those times weren't so long ago, but how quick they pass \stackrel{Dm}{\hspace{0.2cm}}
Our captain George Pollard is lost at the sea
                                                              Was once death a stranger, now approaching us fast
And I look to the East and see nothing but blue
                                                                          G
                                                              But we are Nantucket, the proud and the strong

So what can us starving men do?
                                                              For Nantucket, we must travel on
But sing, sing, we're on our way home
                                                              But oh, how these hunger pangs drive all the thoughts in my
Across the Pacific, and through the unknown

With God as our shepherd then no harm shall pass
                                                              And body dries up in the sun
                                                                                              F7
We'll be in Nantucket at last
                                                              Oh, cause it's meat and fresh water that the six of us crave
                                                                           G C
                                                              So six bits of paper are tossed in the cap
But oh, how this skin of blistered leather pulls tight on our
                                                              And six men reach in and each pull out a scrap
                                                              And one man of six, with the unlucky draw
As rations all dwindle away
And oh, how our dreams every night, of our stomachs so full
                                                              Is one man to help feed us all
